In March of 1985, I received a letter from Miss Faith Clayton in response to a letter I had written to her. In this letter, she told me of her doubts that William Clayton Sr's wife was Elizabeth LANGLEY. The following paragraph is quoted from her letter.

"We know that William Clayton Sr had a wife named Elizabeth and think she was a Langley. This has not been proven. However, William Clayton, Jr named his first daughter Elizabeth L. Why in the world he didn't write out what the L. stood for is a mystery. The grandchildren and great grandchildren of this Elizabeth, now live in Texas, claim that Elizabeth always said her name was Elizabeth Langley."

Does anyone have documentation that Elizabeth was a LANGLEY or documentation of any other maiden name? Any help would be appreciated.

Need proof Vashti, wife of Basil/Basewell Smith PORTER is a COOPER, daughter of Alexander COOPER. Basil Smith PORTER is found in the Pickens District SC Census from 1830 through 1860; Pickens County Census in 1870 and 1880. His wife's name is listed as Vashti in the 1850 through 1880 Census. He wrote a will in 1863, naming his wife Vashti. She must have predeceased him, after the 1880 census, as she is not mentioned in his estate settlement in 1894. Basil died in 1894 age 97 years of age. His obituary says, "He was born at the Sam Porter place about 1/4 mile from where he lived. Hence, all of the days of his long life was spent in Pickens County. While he was once a respectively citizen of Pendleton District, Pickens District and Pickens County, SC.

EDNY KNEW SLAVERY DAYS: Endy Williams, 110 year old colored woman of Easley SC is probably the oldest person in this country. She had know the chains of slavery and also the exhilaration of freedom, for "Aunt Endy" was a slave in the days before the end of the War Between the States, and she was a very valuable one too. She declares that when she was 15 years old she was sold for $1.500. She was strong and could easily do as much as a man, hence she was used as a field hand. Her first master was Thomas Garvin, and later she was sold to Robert Johnson, both of Pickens County. During the days when she was in her prime she says she got up before dawn, took her horse out of the stable, watered and fed him, went to the corn field, where she ploughed until dark, with a bit of rest at noon. The plowing over she declared that she would then help carry water up to the house and after supper there would be the carding and spinning until midnight or later in the the white folks' house. That was what she termed a day's work. When there wasn't plowing there was rail splitting and other strenuous she says. Not all the slavery days were work days, Endy added. At the slave quarters there was some relaxation occasionally, and come Sunday there was preaching at the church. Two seats were reserved for colored people, but after these were filled, late comers would have to wait around in the church yard and get the sermon "rehashed" by some of their friends who were lucky enough to get seats. Endy has known good years and bad years. Now she is in the twilight of her life and is content to sit in her rocking chair by the hearth and watch her grandchildren play around her. Several months ago she suffered an attack of pneumonia and to the surprise of her physician she recovered. Since then, however she hasn't been able to get about much, only walking around a little in the house. With the exception of frequent attacks of asthma, she says she feels very comfortable most of the time. Easley Progress Issue: 14 Sept 1944

LEWIS REDMOND BY Jerry Hughes

ONCE UPON A TIME IN PICKENS COUNTY / HUGHES

interest. The reward for Redmond had been withdrawn by the governor and the reporter asked if it was done so "in obedience to a strong popular feeling?" Earle explained his answer this way.

"Hampton found he had been a little too premature in offering a reward...it was proven to him that Redmond neither led the party or sided in the rescue of illicit distillers.... Now people have a mistaken idea about Redmond. He is nothing but an ignorant, scrub mountain boy, with very little influence. Nor is it true that these distillers are popular heroes."

The administration of the President desired to avoid a conflict between Federal and State judicial courts. There were discussions of abandoning the previous announcement of the President "to assert the sovereignty of the Federal government" and move the case to U S Court. Judge Northrop, who was involved in these discussions, had taken the Federal side in past cases and influenced the decision to let the original announcement stand.

Earle then proceeded to Baltimore to confer with Judge Bond of the U S Circuit Court in order to hold a special term in South Carolina as soon as possible. This was done and the U S Marshal was again sent to enforce the writ.

PRISONER TRANSFER

The PICKENS SENTINEL issue of 15 August 1878 reports the encounter. "Mr Gilreath informed R M Wallace, the U S Marshal, that he would not voluntarily surrender the prisoners, but pointed to the keys where they were hanging. He said to him, 'if he took charge of the prisoners he would have to unlock the cell himself.' This Wallace did and after formally taking charge of the prisoners returned them to the custody of the Sheriff as United States prisoners."

Little if anything else was reported in the papers concerning the trial which didn't reach its conclusion till April 1882. This was almost four years after Amos Ladd was killed and during a period in judicial history when the time from crime to punishment was six or seven months.

WASHINGTON REACTS TO REVENUE OFFICERS

While the Ladd case was drawing the attention of Washington officials, it also drew attention to the revenue raids on citizens. Commissioner Raum wrote letters to his subordinates and regional collectors emphasising a change in tactics.

In one letter to the Greensboro agent he wrote, "I earnestly desire that the internal revenue law shall be enforced peaceably and quietly and without the necessity of using an armed force. This can only be done where the officers are supported by a public sentiment favorable to the observance and enforcement of the laws."

He continued on in several paragraphs suggesting the agent visit the upstate counties, '.... confer with leading citizens and endeavor to interest their sympathies.' He also emphasised that the government would enforce the laws.

He also stated, "his determination that the laws shall be enforced in an orderly and lawful manner, avoiding all unnecessary collisions, and by officers....(who are) men of respectability." In this connection he quoted a statute of the revenue laws "which enact that an officer who is found guilty of any extortion or wilful oppression under color of law shall be subject to indictment."

' In another letter to collector Brayton, again in response to a NEWS and COURIER article, he stressed the importance of leniency. The article expressed concern that illicit distillers who had recently surrendered themselves under amnesty would, "be victims of misplaced confidence and will treacherously dealt with."

He wrote, ".... that is is no gratification to me to have men punished. While violators of the law arm themselves to resist the officers in the enforcement of the law, I am unwilling to make terms with them, but when they express a determination to abandon their fraudulent practices and submit themselves to the authorities, I am ready to deal with them with the most liberal spirit."

He continued to instruct Brayton to publicly announce the government's intentions of acting in good faith toward those desiring amnesty. With the exception of Redmond.

REDMOND STILL DENIED AMNESTY

In a 10 August 1878 letter to the local District Attorney he stated, "After consultation and due consideration, I have decided, that the case of Redmond is entirely exceptional and should not be included with those of ordinary offenders."

Collector Brayton announced a reorganization of revenue officers 25 August 1878. He assigned new officials to the Pickens, Oconee and Greenville counties, Capt E G Hoffman, J O Ladd, J E Gyles, C A Carson and Wm Kennedy. Moved to Spartanburg, York, and Union counties were H D Byron, M W Watson, R P Scruggs, and C W Cummings along with Capt S P Landford. As part of the announcement they were "specially instructed to exercise prudence and leniency in the performance of their duties and will be held to a strict accountability for misconduct."

REDMOND CAPTURED TWICE

In the 17 October issue of KEOWEE COURIER there was this article. "REDMOND CAPTURED!--Redmond, the outlaw, had been captured, and as might have been predicted, a woman did it. He was married on Sunday night last (13 October 1878) at his home in Pickens County to Miss Ladd, sister of the deceased Amos Ladd, who was killed by the Revenue Officers. Probate Judge W G Field, of Pickens, tied the knot, to the satisfaction of all concerned. A flask of genuine Redmond whiskey was sent to the PICKENS SENTINEL and another for the NEWS and COURIER, subject to order."

After almost two years of hardship and tragedy, the couple left Pickens and moved to the Great Smokey mountains
